OPPORTUNITIES FOR UTAH CELERY.

By DR. M. C. MERRILL,
Professor of Horticulture, U. A. C.
The readers of the Ogdin Standard-Examiner are undoubtedly very much interested in the splendid opportunities that await the future of Utah celery. All of you are surely familiar with the excellent merits of our home grown celery, and many of you are in a position to grow the product and otherwise exert a beneficial influence upon the industry.

On an Overland Limited train pulling out of Chicago for the west were two congenial travelers. One was a traveling salesman with headquarters in Chicago, the other was a native Utah returning to his home state. They were hungrily studying the bill of fare in the diner. Listed on the bill was "Utah Celery, 25c." The Chicagoan read the item aloud and said, "Ah, here's where I have a feast. I want to tell you it's worth the price, for Utah celery is the best celery God ever made."

Gathered from all parts of the United States were delegates for a sugar beet convention at the Utah Agricultural College. To hear them talk in the hotel dining room when Utah celery was served would make any native Utah proud of his home state. The universal decision and comment was that Utah celery is the best grown in the United States.

One of the genial easterners ordered three servings of it for his meal. No evidence is at hand showing that he did not repeat the performance at each meal, so the presumption is that he did. At one of the banquets served the sugar beet agriculturists, one of the U. A. C. professors sat between two men from Michigan on one side and two men from Illinois on the other. Never will he forget the praise bestowed upon Utah celery.

Such praise is being heard on every hand every day and it is not overstated at that. At the Utah state fair of 1918, I ate dinner at the same table as the judge of the art exhibit who hailed from Los Angeles. It was a new experience to hear a resident of a California admit the superiority of a product raised in another state over what could be grown there. This he did freely and frankly, however, in the case of Utah celery.

And so one could continue on for pages.

As with many another blessing or opportunity people enjoy and do not fully appreciate, it occurs to me that Utah people have not thoroughly appreciated the possibilities in this unexcelled product of our climate and soil. We are leaving it too much to the people from other states to do all the boasting.

Celery does best on deep, rich, moist soil containing a large percentage of humus. This desirable type of soil for celery is found in considerable areas in various parts of the state, notably in our valley bottoms. The present waterlogged lands where drainage would be a feasible and paying proposition would be most excellently adapted for celery. In fact, such soils are being reclaimed in several places for this purpose.

Successful growers of celery know that while it requires a constant and sufficient amount of moisture for its best growth it will not do well in low and undrained soil where the water stands too near the surface. Hence the ground must be either naturally or artificially drained. A great advantage we have in this pioneer irrigation state is that we can apply the necessary moisture at any time the plants most need it.

Because celery is a rank grower and vigorous feeder, it requires an especially rich and well-fertilized soil. While Utah's bottom lands are naturally rich and fertile, yet it is well to keep the soil in good condition and well built up by liberal applications of barnyard manure annually.

Humus derived from the manure is a prime necessity for perpetual success. The soil, the water supply, and the climate of Utah all being especially favorable, the grower nevertheless needs to keep careful watch over the other factors of production if success is to crown his labors. In the first place, the seed must be of the very best quality and with high germinating power. Because celery loses its vitality very quickly it is desirable to secure good fresh seed each year. If poor seed of low vitality is planted, only small, weakly, unsatisfactory seedlings will be produced. The seed planting is done in a hot-bed or greenhouse and the small plants must be grown under proper conditions of humidity, temperature, and light. It is poor economy to neglect this vital phase of the process. The work of transplanting to the field should also be carefully done, in order for the seedlings to continue vigorous and healthy.

Numerous details regarding the methods of planting, irrigating, cultivating, blanching, harvesting, and storing have been worked out. It should be thoroughly mastered by the prospective celery grower. If he intends to stay in the business, growing celery for market is a specialized business and calls for constant and painstaking effort in order to achieve success.

If the soil is suitable and the various operations are done with care there are inviting profits in store for the grower. Gross returns of $300 to $1000 an acre are realized. In fact, under exceptional conditions the financial returns may be much higher. Celery growing is an industry that offers such possibilities for Utah that it should be developed to the greatest extent commensurate with good business practice and the ever-expanding markets for the product. Let us awake to this fact and take advantage of the opportunity that is clamoring at our door.

THE BEST ON EARTH

Says Mrs. Staples of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Taunton, Mass.—I could not eat or sleep for six months, had fainting spells and could not walk without help for three months, caused by female trouble. My cousin, who was a doctor, told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it helped me greatly. Then during the change of life I used the same remedy. I am seventy years old now and am able to do my own housework and walk one mile to church every Sunday morning and evening. I am recommending the Vegetable Compound to my friends having the same troubles as I had. Your remedy is the best on earth. I cannot find words to express my gratitude to it.—Mrs. SUSAN C. STAPLES, 157-B School St., Taunton, Mass.

The reason that thousands of women from all parts of the country write such grateful letters is that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and happiness into their lives, once burdened with pain and illness. It has relieved women from some of the worst forms of female ills, such as displacements, inflammation, and ulceration. Why don't you try it?
